June 2024

Key figures at a glance

2024 YTD performance: 3.33%*

Performance: Net of fees in the A2 CNH share class, the portfolio returned +0.45% in June.

- Offshore: Offshore return was positive driven by strong carry and rates performance, offsetting small negative credit performance.
- Onshore: Onshore performance was supported by strong rates rally and positive carry return, while credit performance was muted.

Key performance contributors were onshore rates bond, offshore sectors including non-greater China, financials, and local government related. The main detractors were offshore rates hedges and convertible bonds from both onshore and offshore.

Positioning: In onshore, we continue to maintain a barbell approach, prefer high quality short-dated credit bonds on one hand, and longer-dated rates bond on the other hand which serve as a hedge against economic slowdown. In offshore, we continue to prefer a barbell approach, liking short-dated HY bonds with competitive carry alongside long end IG credits with competitive valuations supported by strong demand from onshore buyers.

- Favoured: continue to maintain a barbell approach, prefer short-dated high carry credit bonds on one hand, and longer-dated IG/rates bond on the other hand. Supportive policies and supply trends continue to be bullish for China fixed income which we remain constructive with a focus on diversification.
- Cautious: Nimble with duration, cautious with spread duration (to limit market beta exposure).

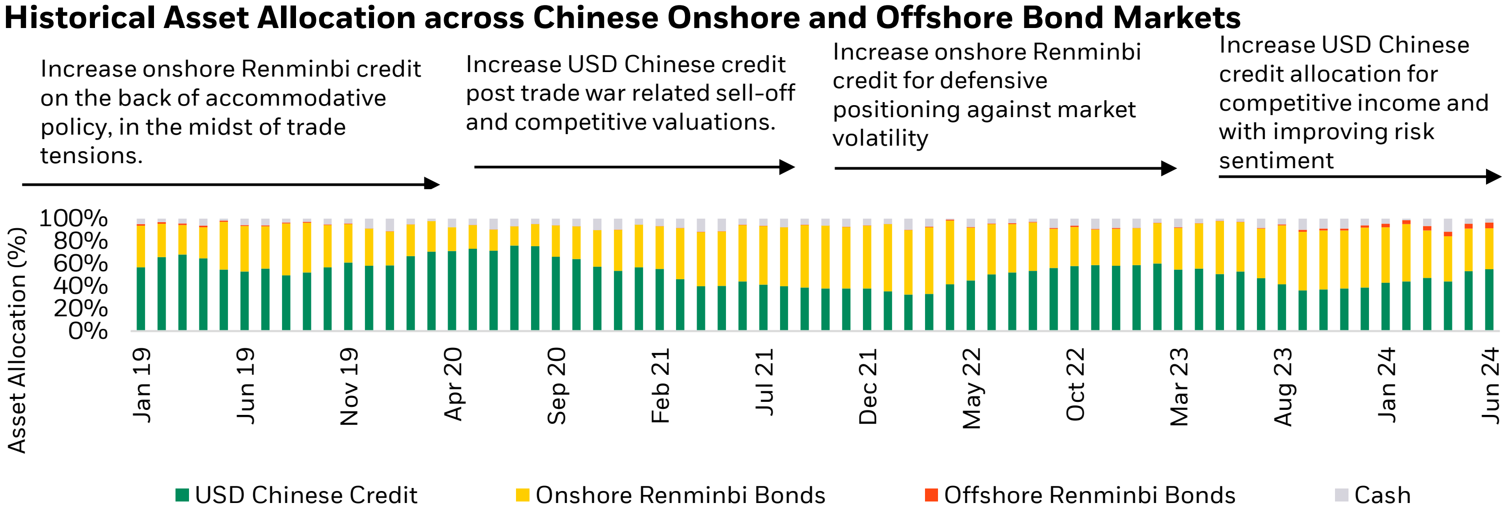
Outlook and Positioning

Balanced allocation between the onshore and offshore markets.

Historical Asset Allocation across Chinese Onshore and Offshore Bond Markets



Source: BlackRock, 28 June 2024

As of end June, the fund has 38% onshore and 62% offshore. We maintained an overweight allocation to offshore market given the attractive after-hedging yield as USD credits continue to provide decent yield pick-up when compared to onshore credits. We took some profit and reduced positions in convertible space ahead of onshore equity market correction. We added in non-greater China space as the all-in yield remains attractive at the current level. For onshore, we took profit in some low yielding Local Government Financing Vehicle (LGFV) after compression in spreads and rotated to offshore LGFV space given the better yield level. The onshore market will remain a source of stable carry given continued accommodative policy. We will continue to adjust our split between onshore and offshore according to market conditions and relative valuation opportunities.

We are defensively positioned while capturing opportunities

Data as of 28 June 2024

Keep market beta risk low
- Average Investment Grade (IG) rating for a balance of income and quality
- Kept credit beta low offshore by keeping to the shorter end with USD spread duration at 1.3 years

Yield arbitrage between onshore and offshore markets
- Adjust allocation between onshore and offshore depending on market conditions and relative valuation opportunities. E.g. we moved some capital since April 2022 to offshore IG for higher carry and benefitted from the offshore rally, but later moved some allocation onshore prior to the Silicon Valley Bank episode in Q1 2023 based on valuation considerations and benefitted from onshore outperformance amid volatility. We recently shift some allocation back to offshore market given supportive credit technical support. CNH-USD hedging cost has turned negative, making the USD hedged share class more appealing

Low and nimble duration exposure
- Maintained low portfolio duration in most of the past year with duration mostly in CNY, we kept USD duration low for most of the time but recently increased USD duration. We added USD duration after weaker macroeconomic data print.
- Continue to be nimble in duration exposure

Allocation to onshore and strategically important names
- Expect monetary policy to be accommodative, and onshore to remain stable and serve as a hedge against risk-off sentiment

Selective and diversified positioning in China property
- In property, we continue to focus on SOE developers and a select few strong POE developers. We prefer those with better asset quality, low near-term redemption pressure, strong funding access and small off-balance-sheet obligations. Although there has been some recovery in sentiment with the announcement of a combination of encouraging policies, overall impact on the housing market remains uncertain, with weak demand and confidence unlikely to vanish overnight after 3 years of sector volatility. The latest rounds of easing reflect stronger determination from authorities to ensure stable sectoral development, but we remain selective and continue to prefer a barbell strategy, with most positions in higher quality survivors to capture potential upside, while holding some distressed credits with limited downside for potential recovery. Finally, we continue to have a balanced allocation across onshore and offshore to diversify risk. We further de-risk in the property space recently from names that have less clear recovery path. As of end June 2024, the portfolio has 4.6 % in exposure to China Property, with a mix of 1.9% in IG and 2.7% in HY, and a balance of 2.0% onshore vs 2.6% offshore.
