Topline

Markets – The Federal Reserve (Fed) held interest rates steady amid resilient economic data and stickier inflation, which led to contribution for riskier assets as well as a sell-off in rates.

Helped – Securitised products, corporate credit, and emerging-market debt contributed.

Hurt – The fund's duration positioning detracted from returns.

Outlook – Sub-trend growth remains our base case given evidence of a soft landing and widening economic expansion. Significantly looser financial conditions are continuing to support growth. Although there are signs that the labour market is still rebalancing and longer-term disinflationary trends are in place, there is still a risk that inflation remains persistent. Both the market and the Fed will continue to be focused on inflation's trajectory.

Fund Overview

Investment objective

To provide income by investing primarily in debt securities.

Month in Review

- Securitized products contributed to returns, with agency mortgage-backed securities (MBS) leading the contribution as interest rate volatility fell and spreads tightened. Commercial MBS also contributed, followed by non-agency MBS and asset-backed securities.
- High yield bonds contributed to returns. Spreads tightened over the month as rates fell. Investment grade corporates also contributed to returns.
- Emergingmarket debt contributed as spreads tightened during the month.
- The fund's duration positioning was the sole detractor from returns, as the 10-year US Treasury yield moved marginally lower, from 4.25% to 4.21%. The fund continues to dynamically adjust its duration and yield-curve positioning, and ended March with 2.5 years of overall duration.

Looking Ahead

- Sub-trend growth remains our base case given evidence of a soft landing and widening economic expansion. Significantly looser financial conditions should continue to support growth. Although there are signs that the labour market is continuing to rebalance and longer-term disinflationary trends seem to be in place, there is still a risk that inflation remains persistent. Both the market and the Fed will continue to focus on inflation's trajectory.
- In 2022, high inflation and low unemployment caused the Fed to raise policy rates into restrictive territory despite downside risks to growth and rising recession probabilities. As the Fed continued hiking rates into 2023, cracks began to appear in the market (particularly in the US regional banking sector) due to the lagged and variable effects of tightening monetary policy. The Fed eschewed rate hikes for the fourth time in a row in March. Uncertainty around the number of Fed rate cuts this year remains.
- Given this backdrop, the fund is focused on maintaining higher credit quality, increasing its liquidity profile, and allocating towards sectors that, in our view, offer attractive yield characteristics given the potential risks. We believe the fund's current duration positioning and diversified allocations to higher-quality securitized investments, higher-quality high-yield corporates, and select emerging-market debt look attractive in the current environment.
